A HISTORIC DOCUMENT—THE LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT OF G. W. P. CUSTIS.—The County Court, which has just closed its session, gave the necessary orders and completed the necessary arrangements for the settlement ted the break to other than accidental causes of the estate of the late Geo. W. P. Cusus. Appraisers were appointed and provision made for all the details which the law requires on such occasions. The house of Mr. Custis, standing in sight of the Capital, upon a similar eminence, had, from the earliest days, a celebrity wide as the nation, but recent events have country. Especially has Arlington and its associations always possessed a peculiar attraction to the people of Alexandria. That sort of special interest which Washington manifested in the affairs of our fathers, Custis, his adopted son, displayed towards their sons, endeavoring, not alone, to descant upon his virtues, in our midst with eloquent words; but by his manner and his devotion to our interests to illustrate to one generation of Alexandrians what had been the onduct of Washington towards its predecessor. of him. Few men peered into the future with a wider experience or a more acute philosophy, yet as he executed his Will that March day of 1855, while the interest of the world gathered around the Malakoff, where Russia defied the armies of France and England, and the city across the Potomac was hearing, with scarce attentive ear, some rumors of mobs in Kansas, he could not see how soon the storm of civil war would scatter all his designs for Arlington, and that even "the Mount Vernon plate," the material emblem of the social life he wished Arlington to perpetuate, would be reft away from his he dreamed, and that he would stand in Hisfory between the two great captains of the age, beritance left it by the family of Mount Vernon of unalloyed mirth and gaiety. would develope a kinship in a sphere far higher than a mere material connexion, the home at resplendent with the lofty civic virtue and mili-tary renown of its head, Mount Vernon and Arlington, blending together in the history and the hearts of the people, safe beyond the accidents of time and the spoilings of mortality. Terrific Hail Storm,

A correspondent of the Richmond Enquirer writing from Westphalia, Southampton county, gives the following description of a terrific hail storm that passed over that locality on the

"The quantity of hail was immense, accompained with torrents of rain, which lasted about twenty minutes, the stones ranging in size from a buckshot to that of a chicken egg, some having been reported much larger. Of a hundred acres of corn in full silk on this farm there is scarcely now to be seen a single perfect blade. The day before the storm a gentleman offered to take about one-half of my peanut crop in the field at fifteen hundred bushels .-Now I dont expect more from the entire crop. My son, Dr. Pretlow, Jr., at Fairfield, sustained more injury, as he has a cotton crop, of which there is probably not one entire stalk standing in his field. When the storm-cloud appeared, Dr. Pretlow, Jr., and myself were walking in the pea field; he remarked that "Yonder cloud, with a black body and yellowish-red wings is coming like a bird flying." We hastened to the house, which was near by, when he directed his horse to be taken back to the stable, which the boy, who held him, could not accomplish in time to escape the tempest. The noise heard by persons outside of the range of the storm is described as that of a number of railroad trains rushing through the air, and the hail falling on my house could be diswere being thrown against it.

DENVER, COLORADO, Aug. 11.-A cold-blooded murder was committed last night thirteen miles from this place, up the Platte River. Geo. M. Bonacina and Mrs. Newton, his sister, were shot by a German farm-hand named Theodore Myers. Bonacina is dead and Mrs. Newton will probably die. Myers is still at large, but a considerable reward is offered for his arrest. Mrs. Newton thinks that Myers was hired to murder them. It appears that she was married last summer to one Friedenhall who owned the property but deeded it to her after their marriage. A quarrel occurring subsequently, Friedenhall left his wife, who has since lived on the place with her brother. Suspicion naturally points to Friedenhall as the instigator of the murder.
